1. When did you have your dream(s)? Your best guess is fine. You can list a date range or multiple dates if you have multiple dreams to share.

Night of 4/26/2020

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

Stephen Colbert was running for some political position, either governor or president. He was running on some kind of "return to sanity/common sense" platform, with vaguely "progressive" policies but also it seemed purposefully opaque. I was at some point on a bridge and it was dead night (black sky) though somehow objects were fully lit in neutral lighting like an old playstation game or something. I think the bridge was red. There were flyers, I think of Stephen's face. I remember being disappointed in so many people falling for his empty platitudes on top of his lack of experience in office but that at least he was better than Biden. I believe earlier that day I was reading an article on why comedians often have bad politics and how the banal politics of late night talk shows influences this phenomenon. I'm sure that's a big reason I had that dream specifically that night.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

Besides the political situation we're in specifically right now... my dreams are usually more centered around my actions, where I'm either being chased by some monster or avoiding an apocalypse or interacting with old high school acquaintances, it's more "my story" and my actions feel like they lead from one place to another. In this dream I wasn't being chased, I wasn't looking for anyone or feeling much of anything actually. I was just kind of watching things happen... which is definitely how things feel now in waking life.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

I haven't personally noticed a big change in my dreaming habits. On a surface level they're often just surreal mish-mashes of things I experience, then immediately forget 40% of when I wake up, then the remaining 60% goes away by lunchtime unless I write it down. This dream did stand out because of my in-dream thoughts to myself about Biden, but overall I don't know how much my dreaming has really changed overall.

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

In real life, I am currently staying at my soon to be in-laws who are, rightly, taking the pandemic very seriously as am I. In my dream, I am at said in laws house. I tell everyone I'm going out for a walk. Once outside, I walk the 40 minutes to the local airport and get the first flight to New Orleans, a city I've never been to. Once there, I take a cab to a popular area. Everyone is out eating in outdoor seating areas of restaurants, stumbling out of bars, listening to live music. I see a man I've never seen before and for some reason I follow him quite closely. He's turning down different streets, going into buildings, I follow him everywhere. Finally he enters a museum like institution and goes up a tight, rickety set of stairs, in the middle of the stairs he quickly turns around and says loudly "why are you following me?!" I say " I don't know." He looks at me with disgust and says to "get away." At this point in the dream I feel intensely, memorably guilty - i guess for not social distancing but more so that I just left for "a walk" from my in laws. I feel "awake" in the dream, as if it's almost real life and i woke up to find my dream was real. I get a cab and get on the first return flight home feeling horrible the whole way. I slink back inside the in laws house. I'm a quarantine criminal! Then, thank heavens, I really wake up!

breaking social distancing with memorable feeling, feeling like I need to escape the house I'm in, etc. These are things I didn't realize I felt until this dream.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Very much so. The above is the most directly social distancing related, but my dreams are much more memorable generally. Perhaps some of that is to do with I'm setting alarms less and leaning into whatever sleep cycle occurs on any given day, but some of it must certainly be the stranger than fiction reality we find ourselves in.

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

I have friends who I'm asking to fill this out because they have been having much more intense dreams than I. ( There's a big motif of physically pushing people away who aren't following social distancing in the dream.) Also: Have you seen The OA? I am particularly interested if you have because I'm very Interested in the possibility that someone I Silicon Valley will start analyzing our dreams at a mass scale and be perplexed by what they find.... would live to know your thoughts there!

April 20th & April 26th, respectively

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

4/20 I was at my high school which was a boarding school up on a hillside but there were all kinds of other people there and it wasn't exactly the same. It was like we were all at a music festival but it was permanent and there were big houses. The entire place had a bohemian vibe and I remember looking like a bohemian hippie of sorts. Drugs weren't explicit in the dream but it was clear that they were around and people were on them, maybe even me. Somehow my uncle was there and I remember it was decided that we were an item. He has a wife and kids (my aunt and cousins) and I was horrified that they might find out. I also felt terribly ashamed that I was supposed to be in a couple and be intimate with my uncle. However this was decided for me, and I was simply to go along with it, I had no choice. It was like he was trying to be young again and I was his portal to that. Part of me was horrified and the rest of me just went along with it accepting it as my reality. The dream only went so far as having us walking together, but I felt a great sense of shame even after I woke up. 4/26 I dreamt that I was inside a mansion with a high school friend. I imagine this was my quarantine brain - since we are stuck indoors, make the indoors gigantic. The mansion had at least 50 rooms and there were about 12 kids that lived there with their parents. We knew some of the kids, that's why we were there. One of the kids had a horse, and we were able to take turns galloping on this horse through all the rooms in the house. Even though we were galloping through small doorways and messy rooms (they weren't large rooms, there were just so many of them), the horse went full speed ahead and riding it gave you this incredible sense of freedom. We all took turns riding this charcoal black and grey horse through the house, and it was wonderful. Somehow it didn't cause any more disarray than was already in the house - it was a creatively messy space.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

4/20 This might be because the pandemic is forcing me inwards to look at my relationship with men, my sexuality, and male/authority figures. The pandemic seems to be requesting that we look deep within and release conditioning that has been destructively guiding us. I believe this dream sought to bring light to some destructive ideas I have inherited from the larger patriarchy around my own agency as a woman when it comes to my decisions and my sexuality. 4/26 This felt like a pandemic dream because I brought the horse indoors. We are all sheltering in place in our homes and so my mind created an enormous indoor space within which to venture and gallop and feel free. I loved that the freedom I felt was so pure and yet it was indoors. Maybe the pandemic is allowing a newfound sense of internal freedom. I also think it was interesting it was someone else's horse, and we were all taking turns. The concept of social distancing didn't permeate the dream.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

I am sleeping more and my dreams feel longer and more involved.

A lot of my dreams are adventure dreams. Also I am defending something like a homes or family. There is A LOT of water in my dreams too.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

In many of my dreams there is "Sometime" coming. Like a flood or a violent group that is coming to kill everyone. I have to protect and find a way out for me and the ones I love. Or I have to find the ones I love to bring them to safety.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

They have become more violent. I do dream a lot even before. But now the violence is must more visual. In past dreams violence would happen more outside of then dream and I would hear about it or be able to run away before anything happens. Now I see when people are shot, beaten, or worse.

Yes, for sure. I am dreaming much more frequently and my dreams are disturbing and not at all pleasant. I think it is my mind's way of processing the underlying anxiety I am feeling. 2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

I was out in Wyoming telling a woman about my job. It was night time, she had a horse trailer and was pulling it through the mud on the back of her truck. I was leaving my old work (which was a tannery and leather goods shop called Merlin's)but it wasn't actually the shop and it was somehow more gory. I was hanging out with Adam Driver and we were just being really sweet with each other. I was messing around with him and I felt like we were near my dad's place for some reason. It wasn't my dad's place, it just had that feeling. We had been playing in the river outside of Merlin's and initially I had told Adam to get out of the river because it was polluted. All of the waste from processing the animals would go through the runoff drain and it was being poured into the river. I didn't want him going in it since I knew how gross it was, plus the water would be cold. Adam took me to the bank of the river and we saw the night sky. I had vertigo looking at the water and the sky. The stars and the dark water all flipped... Some how, that's how we got back to my dad's place. It was almost 6 AM and I told him, "oh no my father will be home soon". As soon as I said that we heard keys and he opens the door. I thought he would be weird about me having a man over, but he was just passively strange. My father also brought home some broken hanging lamps. I had the impression that I had at some point encouraged my dad to get these lamps as a hobby and that made him want more. Adam was worried about my dad and said I probably shouldn't have gotten him into buying more things. There's more stuff that happens with Adam but it all feels sort of muddled. Just a lot of running and something with wizards, other people or cleaning.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I think I see a lot of need for comfort. The world is dark and gross. I see the dangers, a sort of rust analysis. There are elements of facing that with the help of a comforting influence. The worries of everyday are there too. I worry about my dad a lot since he lives alone and does have much to do or anywhere to go, nor does he have the desire. I live far from my loved ones and I just moved to a new town. I'm also single, so having a partner during this time would possibly make it more manageable. I do have a lot of personal anxiety for the more fragile members of my family. Another fear is being able to start/maintain an intimate relationship with anyone. This is sort of all of that at once. I feel like there is a bit of comfort or self-soothing going on in the face of the abyss.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

This is just one of many Adam Driver dreams I've had lately where we're somewhere gross or chaotic and we're trying to escape. In my real life I have to do so much alone, I'm glad to have some help out running some of this madness in my dreams.

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

I would say that my fear of being alone isn't the same as a fear of being abandoned. In most of my dreams I have someone there to help me. I dream of my friends and family and now apparently Adam Driver... but being alone isn't the same as being abandoned. I'm not saying it doesn't make me sad, but it feels like less of a spiteful act and more like a big accident. The manifestation of that in my dreams makes them more bittersweet and less like nightmares.

1. When did you have your dream(s)? Your best guess is fine. You can list a date range or multiple dates if you have multiple dreams to share.

Mid April

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

1. I had a dream that took place entirely in my partner's bathroom. I walked in to use the toilet and noticed a large amount of shit still sitting in the toilet. I was upset that my partner left their feces there without flushing. I went to flush and the toilet began to overflow. Suddenly my partner appears with a woman friend who I've never met before. My partner (a man) begins to scoop up the overflow from the floor with his bare hands and into the shower. I start to panic because, it's disgusting! I'm yelling at him to stop putting the shit in the shower, it's not helping and will clog the shower. Next thing I remember is him and his friend showering together, naked, which also made me very upset. In the dream he tries to convince me that it's totally acceptable for him to shower with his friend. I'm incredibly upset and again, this feeling of panic over the situation starts to seep in. 2. This dream is not as detailed but I'm originally from Colombia and had a dream that I'm back there with my family. We're climbing up a mountain to visit family who live in a very poor neighborhood in the mountain (like a favela). The mountain is also like a jungle and once we've scaled it, I begin to fly over the landscape. I keep flying and flying until finally I land in an extremely dangerous area and suddenly I can no longer fly. I'm terrified. I have to find my way back home with no help (I have no cellphone on me) and alone. I'm scared I'll get assaulted or die. I manage to run back home and am yelling at my family for leaving me (even though I'm the one who left by flying?). No one takes me seriously and they laugh at me. I am now screaming at the top of my lungs, my family gets scared, I calm down and wake up.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I think these dreams are manifestations of the amplified anxiety I'm experiencing. Everything is going wrong, the situation is extreme, I'm "alone" in dealing with whatever is happening as the people around me seem oblivious or impervious to the danger. There's an consistent underlying feeling of panic. Also, people leave me or the threat of being left (in the dream with my partner) is present. I'm in quarantine alone and I'm really grappling with feelings of abandonment and fear of being alone. Usually this fear is an "irrational" one as I can always see my friends and family. Now, my fear seems completely real and I'm struggling with that.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

To an extent. I think they're more vivid and for the ones I remember, mostly leave me feeling panicked or worried at least and also feeling alone.

So I went to see my father. I want to meet my father at the 79th Street Boat Basin. We had always wanted a boat, I thought you wanted a boat. I never wanted a boat but it was good to see him. I came back down by train and then I was somewhere in the fields in Nebraska far far far away. I always wondered if I needed to take less time driving or being on the train, then playing music. Whenever I had to travel I always wanted to be playing music and I resented traveling. But the other time I was embarking on a train and when I met you I was trying to be polite, but you blocked the door with your luggage, and I wasn't able to get out at the train stop. I thought that I had to go through customs and immigration and that I had missed it. I'm not going to One Stop... too far. Maybe I'd missed the train but I couldn't tell. Then we were sitting in the restaurant cafeteria, a strange underground place and they came by and asked us to share our table with someone. I wasn't sure I wanted to share my table with anyone. I was waiting for you to return and then an old man sat there next to me and I tried to have compassion for him, but what I really wanted was to be left alone. I don't understand why I want to be left alone so much and then I remembered my father's smile. I'd like to see him smile. He had a nice smile. So I had been reading James Joyce's Ulysses. Was it Nestor or Telemachus or the Sirens? I couldn't remember the code, was it a class, a method or a variable? I woke up thinking what about the lives of the kings and queens of England. Was it the Tudors or was it the Stuarts or the Hanovers which took us right to the Inception of the United States?

1. When did you have your dream(s)? Your best guess is fine. You can list a date range or multiple dates if you have multiple dreams to share.

I had dreams every day last week.

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

ALL I DREAM ABOUT IS EANNA. I keep having dreams where I go back to Ireland and try to see him. In one of them we all go back, the whole family, and I text him and ask to see him but he says no. I still go back on my own to his old neighborhood and visit everyone I used to know and they all want nothing to do with me. I wake up sad and the whole day sucks. But it's scary accurate. In all the dreams I can see the house and his yard and all the roads in the neighborhood just as they are in real life. In another dream I ask him to break up with his girlfriend and he says yes and then in the dream I'm happy but I still wake up sad. In another dream I had the whole family was on this ship and we were like in the basement of it so you could see out the underwater windows like in a submarine and it was a storm and we saw this other big ship get totally destroyed by this giant red-purple blob that we later found out was this MASSIVE octopus like two times as big as the ship and everyone thought it was wild.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I have no idea the Eanna dreams are probably just because we talked recently. The Octopus dream could definitely be a stress pandemic dream. Being in the midst of a storm and just watching something giant and uncontrollable come out of nowhere and consume and destroy something like a boat which is built to survive a storm. But can't survive a massive octopus.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Yes I usually don't dream at all, or if I do I don't remember the dreams. Last week I dreamed every frickin day and I woke up sad and cry every time. Just don't like being reminded of Ireland and Eanna. So yes frequency is increased and I'm able to remember my dreams better than usual.

Around mid April

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

This was my first dream that was overtly Covid related. I was in the lobby of our building with my boyfriend, either waiting for someone or for a package. Two of the doorman were fighting each other. They told us that they both had Covid 19, and they were both arguing that the other had given it to them. It was a physical fight. Meanwhile residents were continuing to enter and exit the building, trying to stay 6 feet away from everyone else and the scuffling doormen. The other residents all looked nervous about being close to anyone, trying to move quickly. My boyfriend and I sat on the side trying to avoid other people but it was difficult in the small space. Everyone had masks on except for me and my boyfriend. I had a feeling like "well, we are probably going to get it too". A little sad, a little nervous, but kind of resigned to the inevitable. Then I woke up.

This one was a pretty literal connection.

I had a very disturbing dream, which I have had at various times of my life (each time a little different but all involving an out of control car). In last night's version I was in some strange woodsy locale, trying to find a way to leave. There was an old truck, from the 1950s, all rusty and smelling very strongly of mold. My daughter was with me but not really there. I called her to say I found us an escape. I got into the decrepit truck and it started rolling down a steep hill but the engine would not start. I kept pressing the gas pedal and trying to get it into gear but it was rolling backwards very fast. I managed to stop it and get out. Then I started pushing it back up the hill to where I started. Then I got in again and this time I rolled up the windows which were down before. As I rolled up the window a clear plastic envelope appeared to be stuck to the side of the window. In it were many photos of me when I was around 6-9 years old. (I am 61 now) In some of them my parents were there. (they are both dead) They made me incredibly sad. I think it is a classic anxiety dream (being out of control in the driver's seat) but with the added distress over losing all my family members and then seeing pictures of a happier time long gone.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

the out of control feeling of the rolling backwards truck with me in the driver's seat makes me think it was a pandemic dream. No one knows what will happen. Also, the old rusted out truck suggests economic distress, which is really on my mind.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

YES. All my dreams are upsetting scary dreams or very lonely dreams or dreams about me failing in my career. I keep having dreams about being broke while my best friend is raking it in and being very successful. I am torturing myself!

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

I used to have very vivid dreams, but lately I forget them almost as soon as I wake up unless I really try to hold onto them. I did last night because I had received your email yesterday, so it was on my mind.

recurring starting early April

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

Most nights in the week I will have dreams about escaping some kind of imprisonment. This is a modification from my standard recurring "adventure" genre dreams because in these dreams, I always fail and get re-captured. The location changes; sometimes it's a Playboy Mansion grotto party, sometimes it's an old hotel being used for hostages, once it was a cult compound, once it was a really nice townhouse, once it was a really intricate pet store. But every time, I am alone in a room and my only goal is to escape. I break out and encounter obstacles and barriers along the way, and throughout the dream I fail over and over. Sometimes I am re-captured, sometimes I am magically transported back to the starting location like dying in a video game. It is deeply frustrating and the person imprisoning me is always dangerous and anonymous. Occasionally friends or loved ones pop up in the dreams but usually not at all. This is different too because my dreams are usually heavily populated with familiar faces.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I think it's just the dread of being confined and not being able to escape. Pretty literal, this one.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

As I said above, it's changed the tone of my dreams and the population density (lol). Pre-pandemic, I rarely had nightmares and usually had grand adventure dreams with vast expansive landscapes. Usually, I'll be a Kim Possible type badass, fighting crime and solving mysteries. If I have anxieties and fears, I often battle them this way in my dreams. Now the enemy is invisible instead of right there in front of me and I'm not fighting I'm running. And I used to run into all kinds of people in my dreams, to the point where I became known amongst my friends for inappropriately telling distant acquaintances that I dreamed about them, and thus making them very uncomfortable. Now, occasionally my quarantine partner shows up, but mostly I'm isolated in my dreams as well.

I dreamt that there was an ongoing battle between one side (that I was on) and another that was somehow different. I guess they were kind of zombie like, but not exactly. They were still cognizant but dangerous in some way. I dreamt that my side fought against them for a long time and finally won the battle but it wasn't a happy ending. It just felt anxious and tenuous. As if nothing was settled. In the landscape of the dream these other people lived across a field where a forest was that was dense and couldn't be explored. After the battle we moved forward but not confidently. We felt like we could be infiltrated again at any time. The other people could look like us if they tried so it was entirely possible they'd come back. After some time had passed I dreamt I saw one of them trying to join a group of people and I remember drawing attention to it and there being more. Another battle began but after that I can't remember what happened. For some reason my boss was there, haha.

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

I relived the the ending of my last relationship, which happened about four years ago. The people involved were there, but the events were metaphors for what was actually going on at the time. I was at a party at my ex's after we had broken up, and my friends were there, too. I wanted to have a good time, but my best friend was being standoffish, and I was there alone. So, I ended up feeling lonely and abandoned even though it was a really great party. I had a big suitcase to lug around, since I didn't have a home, and was staying with someone I was sleeping with. He was a married politician who had come with me to the party along with his infant and toddler. While he was there, I helped him take care of his kids, which kept me too busy to have a good time. Once he left, it was just me and my suitcase, and a bunch of people who didn't seem to want me there. I hid in an alley and tried to call my mom for a ride, but I couldn't dial her number (I usually can't use technology in my dreams), so I just sat and cried.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I never had closure from that relationship, and I've kept so busy the past few years that I never fully processed what happened. Now that I have more time to myself, I'm allowing myself to grieve.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Yes. In most of my dreams, I'm behaving like I do in the real-life global pandemic. I avoid getting too close to people in my dreams.

I had a dream that my spouse and I were trying to move a giant Christmas tree out of a hotel room. I was happy about in the tree because I made all the decoration using recycled materials. The hotel staff was willing to help to help us move the tree outside the room. But at some point as we were moving to a different room, the ceiling started to cave in. Brown gunk oozed from the ceiling. We had to run before the whole room caved in. Next I remember being on a nice cleaner room, talking to my husband again. And I asked him Wait, was it only our room that suffer? He said yes and the the hotel management gave us a different room while they investigated. Sadly we couldn't save the giant Christmas tree from the room.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

I think maybe the sense of hope and loss and then hope again. Some aspects of this "new world" are bringing a lot of joy and it is hard to imagine how hard it will be to go back to "normal".

Had this crazy red dream, where me and this other figure were swimming in a toxic pool with toxic red flowers. All the other figure was saying we're lines from Futurama. Somehow we were in love and it was like a sexual love?? But like no sex involved. Then we reincarnated into to kids who grew up and fell in love. But the only lines the other person said were zoibergs lines from futurama haha

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life?' How did the dream make you feel?

I live in a mountainous place, and I dreamed over and over about mountain lions. They were pacing outside my windows, they were getting trapped in my house with me, they attacked my brother when he got bold and went outside, and I often didn't see them fully but just knew they were there. They were scary but almost in a detached way? Like I was watching it happen and knew that I should be scared but was also fascinated and wanted to see them better.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

All of my family members got covid, (I had unknowingly brought it into the house when I had to move home) and my dad is in a lot of risk categories and had a rough go of it (he is okay now) so I was feeling a lot of guilt and weirdness about that. But the lion dreams have stopped since my family has recovered, so I feel like they must have been connected.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Overall, I have had more dreams than usual, and they have been more vivid but less lifelike than usual. I remember them better, but it might be because I have more time in the morning to think about them instead of rushing off to work.

DREAM: I went into a room where a wake was being held for Samuel Beckett. I glanced at the rigid, horizontal corpse, took notice of its sharp face, and immediately ran down the steps and out of the building. Later, I returned to the building, where I lived on an upper floor, and stopped in again at the wake on the third floor. I was startled to see that the corpse was not laid out, but was cradled in the arms of a middle-aged man who was aggressively combing the corpse's thick mane of black hair. As I watched Beckett's head, I saw his eyes flutter. This startled me--and I told a heavy-set, matronly Irish woman, who seemed to be the supervisor of this grooming operation--that Beckett wasn't dead, his eyes moved. She dismissed my statement with a wave and a shrug and said I was wrong. Beckett was very much dead, that the dead sometimes respond like that. Beckett's corpse then went through some violent spasms; his eyes flew open and he stared at me. I was frightened by the intensity of his stare. He moved his lips, not to speak, but in a stretching motion. Then the corpse farted a loud wailing fart, which I knew was the expelling of the body's final gasses. Beckett then became quite animated, and this, combined with his stare, threw me into a panic. I had the sensation that the corpse wanted to chase after me, not to harm or frighten me, but for some sort of an explanation. I bolted out of the room. As I turned around, I saw the old Irish woman talking to the corpse. She looked at her watch and shook her head. Although I didn't hear Beckett's question to her, she said he was wrong, it's 3:44 in the afternoon, not evening. I knew he had asked her about his time of death. The Irish woman was quite calm, totally unfazed by this intercourse with the dead. She had apparently experienced this many times before, and she was there (it was her job) to relieve the dead's anxiety about their difficult situation.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

The quarantine allowed me the time to plow through a few books I had received as Christmas gifts. I had just finished reading Deirdre Bair's memoir, "Parsian Lives: Samuel Beckett, Simone de Beauvoir and Me." The day after completing her book, I read Deirdre Bair's April 18th obituary in the NY Times. I am a big Beckett fan and who could possibly be a better voice for our pandemic than his? Couple that with my reading about yet another elderly death, that of author Bair, it created a perfect subconscious storm for a dream that left me terrified. I jumped up from the bed and immediately wrote it down because it was so powerfully real to me.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

In the morning my cat always comes up on the bed to snuggle with me, and that morning she woke me up in the middle of the dream and I woke up screaming. -- Another night I have been having continuous dreams about Molly-Margaret, an instagram influencer and her girlfriend. I had a dream that the two of them, a friend and I made pasta together from scratch in their apartment in NYC.

I had a dream that I had told an acquaintance that I would marry him, and I was really regretting it and trying to figure out how to get out of it. I knew I had agreed to marry him because I was stressed about money because of the Coronavirus. When he asked me to marry him over an Instagram DM, I said yes because I thought "he gives financial stability ". But I was really regretting this because I don't really want to marry him! Our wedding was coming up in 2 days, and he had commissioned a sculpture that would have our two faces on it. The side with his face was done, but he needed me to meet him so they could scan my face to put on the currently more roughed in face. He was asking me and showing me photos of the sculpture on Instagram. I was like "oh no, how to I get out of this". In the dream world (and real life) I hadn't even seen him in person for months and now I was supposed to get married to him. I just kept thinking "I made a huge mistake" but I couldn't think of how to get out of it. I was nervous to tell him "hey sorry, that was a mistake when I agreed to marry you", because I didn't want to hurt his feelings. I was about to tell my boyfriend (different person) that I had made a huge mistake and explain the whole thing. Then I woke up. I was happy it was just a dream!

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

In this dream, the coronavirus and stress about money became part of the everyday life of the dream. It's what caused me to agree to something that I totally regretted later.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

I was on a journey by car (no flying since covid) Seeing a friend and her elderly mom in Palm Springs, CA. Friend's mom takes hydroxychloroquine and slowly reverses aging. She reverts to a four-year-old. I'm amazed at how sweet she is and how much she resembles her daughter (my friend). I'm amazed at how she doesn't know me but hugs me tightly. I leave to return home by car, but take along two young strangers that I met at my friend's mom's house who need a ride, but as we are traveling thru the desert, suddenly the highway ends. Abandoned roads and half-built bridges and still wet concrete, so we head in another direction. We come to a small southern town and see people out and about not social distancing and I get worried. Cafes and bars and restaurants are packed. No one is wearing a mask. I'm anxious so I go back to my car, but I encounter steep areas with drop offs that I can't navigate without possibly breaking bones. That's when I wake up.

[This dream takes place in a cinematic context - it "plays like a movie" rather than an experience where I have any agency. I'll mostly try and play it back in chronological order, but some moments will require additional context/explanation] The opening scene is a socialite gathering of some sort... or it's a political fundraiser event. It's hard to say, but it's definitely a gathering of an elite upper class. Taking a moment to step outside, we see the entrance to some lower-east-side building, and at the top of the stairs is a hardboiled detective, very noir, except that he is very small, like a mix between an insect and a ball of dust. [Generally speaking all of the other characters are humans]. He gives the usual noir/hardboiled type detective monologue, possibly while taking a drag of a cigarette [I forget but I think that's why he's stepping outside for a moment]. We get from this monologue that he is a "pedophile detective," interested in catching and bringing down pedophiles, and that he's been tracking down a particularly elite figure who is widely suspected as being a pedophile who has evaded proper arrest. At this point we get some additional context [or it happens slightly before/after, the "film" gets murky with chronology here]: the world of this film is also in the middle of a pandemic - something called the "Caroda Virus," and the audience is expected to understand the obvious real-life parallel. The reason it's called the Caroda Virus is because of the sitting U.S. President, Donald Caroda, whose complete ineptitude in containing and dealing with the disease's spread has given it this popular nickname, which is practically the official name for this disease. [I personally cannot remember if this "fancy event" that opens the film is a fundraiser for Donald Caroda, but it's possible. I think he MIGHT be a democrat actually? He's definitely doesn't have Trump's personality - he acts more like a typical stereotypical politician] (1/2)

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

(2/2) - Sorry, I ran out of characters above. Dream continues: There is some evidence, according to the speck of a detective, that some of the pedophile's "girls" are somewhere at this event, and this turns out to be true - there is some little scene [memory is murky] of these highschool-aged girls being lined up at the staircase, the detective is able to avoid being seen due to his size. Around this time the tiny detective is joined by a second tiny character - I BELIEVE they are implied to both know each other already, but this second speck is like a "rookie" sidekick figure for the detective, wants to help the detective and tags along. The two specks try to follow the last girl in the lineup as they walk away and go their separate ways. They manage, after some struggling to keep up, to hitch onto her backpack. They decide to jump off at some point [I guess they WEREN'T following her all the way to the pedophile after all??] and get to where the detective was trying to reach: a 'Koala Sanctuary,' where a "tribe" of Koalas were living [I don't think this was an official human-organized site]. The detective makes his way through the pack, until reaching a spot where he calls to a specific named Koala - a female who runs over to him at the sound of his call. She is apparently his 'mount,' like a trusty horse or something like that. The rookie admires her [as one would admire a beautiful horse], and the detective explains that a Koala's fur is really soft, apparently so soft that it's impossible for them to catch the Caroda Virus. [It is at THIS point that I woke up, end of dream]. --- This is a pandemic dream for fairly obvious reasons, namely the "Caroda Virus" this movie imagines. Also, I imagined [to myself, while dreaming] that this speck detective had a voice/demeanor similar to Brace Belden of the TrueAnon podcast, which I have been listening to more while in quarantine.

At this moment, I'm not sure if my dreaming habits have changed all too much - they already featured "obvious real life parallels" on and off, with some dreams having obvious personal/real world connections and others being completely detached from what's going on in my life. The particular current events are obviously inspired by the pandemic in this moment in time, but I don't think I'm dreaming MORE often about current events than I used to, to be honest. If I had to make any guesses, I think *MAYBE* I'm dreaming less about people that I personally know? Maybe my friends/family are showing up less often, either as main characters or random cameos. Hard to say.

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

I had one dream where I was married. My wife and I went to Alaska for vacation and stayed in a lodge in a small town. My wife decided to go out for a jog and bumped into a couple people from a commune next door. She refused to be polite and when they threatened her with violence, she blew them off and went for her jog, despite me yelling that maybe she should just come inside to be safe. As she's getting back, some of the commune people jump her and stab her death in front of me. I call the police and a local deputy and another guy that I guess isn't a sheriff but helping out anyways come to try and deal with this murder. Turns out, the commune are ritual practicing satanists and over the course of the next three days, they send large groups of people with guns to try and kill me. The first two days, the three of us rebuff them in gun fights, after which the deputy surmises that we've killed them all, so he leaves. Then with our guard down, a third wave comes. This battle is more hectic and we barely make it through. At one point, I somehow am shooting bullets from my iPhone camera. While this battle is happening, the leader of the cult, a little girl, creeps in through a window and performs a ritual sacrifice in a back room while recording it on vhs. When I find the recording, I watch it and find it truly disturbing, for whatever reason, only my dream self watched it, so I have no idea what happened on it. Either way, left in the pile of viscera was a small glowing green demon. My crew and I, now free of the Stalinist threat come together to decide how to get rid of this demon. We travel down the forested hill the, down a massive waterfall and to the town below which is Newport New Jersey. For whatever reason the town is super crowded and we nudge our way through til we get to a beach where Anthony Anderson is hanging out. Then an hulking member of our party puts the demon in a tiny car meant for a child and chucks it into the ocean. Fin.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

It felt rather vivid. I don't typically remember my dreams or dream much at all so this stood out. Also early in the pandemic, there was a home invasion a couple blocks down so that has been a running concern of mine since the beginning.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

They seem more vivid and I'm remembering them more frequently. This typically happens to me in times of societal unrest. During the most recent North Korea rocket tensions, I dreamed a new end of the world scenario every night for 7 days.

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

I had a dream last night where I dead named a trans sister that I've had a hardcore crush for the last 6 months and I'm still shook about it. That dream was about super dangerous rock climbing a la Vertical Limit. Also very vivid, but once that happened, I couldn't remember anything but that.

1. When did you have your dream(s)? Your best guess is fine. You can list a date range or multiple dates if you have multiple dreams to share.

They started in April and are still going on now (June 29)

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

Honestly, I've had so many dreams I'm just going to give a summary of common themes. They all contain physical spaces, and whether they're known or unknown to me in the physical world, they contain other people who are not acting as if there is a pandemic. Across all the dreams I feel a lot of anxiety about proximity to these other dream characters and often find myself trying to run away, move my body further away from unmasked dream characters (no dream characters as of yet have worn a mask), or straight up just feel this doom or sinking feeling and almost claustrophobia because of the ever present unmasked dream characters. In all these dreams, I've also not had access to a mask, but have been very aware that I need to distance myself by all means possible. Last night, for the first time since I started having these covid dreams in April, I possessed the knowledge that I had a mask and initially made it my mission to find it in the dream. I never found it, and I still had a lot of anxiety about the unphased other dream characters in proximity to me, but I wasn't as bent on getting away from them as usual. I woke up with racing heart, paranoia, and other normal waking up from a nightmare feelings even though nothing particularly scary happened. I don't know what prompted the change, but apparently I now have a mask in my dreams and am still very afraid of other people. No dream characters have presented themselves with a mask yet. Hopefully soon they will ☺

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

The connection to the pandemic is definitely all in my head in these dreams. The dream world itself hasn't changed much from my normal dream life, but my anxiety towards it and it's characters has.

Not in structure, like I mentioned before, but massively in the way they effect me in dream and out. They're all uncomfortable at best and nightmares at worst because of my dream self constantly having to run away from the dream landscapes that is unphased by the pandemic while my dream self is.

During covid me and my cousins went to chill by one of the bridges in the city, and we watched part of it collapse- bridge was fine but it was a huge deal and made national news etc- then a movie dealing w terrorist groups initiating the collapse of all the bridges in nyc game out and in spite of covid the timing made it a national phenomenon - everyone went to see it. So Me my cousins and my aunts, Amy and Melissa, went to see it, as well as my mom. It was super effective and it felt like I was in the movie while watching it. The line between the dream world and the movie was totally blurred. Afterwards my mom didn't want to go home ( to Brooklyn) cause she was so freaked out She even began crying. Everyone scoffed at her and thought she was being ridiculous but I empathized and calmed her down - did breathing exercises w her. And we went home.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

Literally involved Covid, but also had to do with the collapse of our civilization, which feels irrevocably linked to Covid.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Seemingly with this one! I think it's cemented a primal sense that the end of the world may be imminent in my lifetime, and so this dream seems to have a lot to do with who I would want to be at the end of the world given the internalized reality of that situation.

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

I feel like empathy seemed like a major theme of the dream. In the throes of chaos, empathy is the only thing we really have to get anywhere, or to be a community in any way shape or form as chaos unfolds.

I was in a university classroom, stadium seating; the students were on one side of the room, Donald Trump and his entourage were on the other. He was sitting in on the class as some sort of PR stunt. I was one of the students, and whenever Trump said something, I would mock him and insult him. The professor and Trump were angry, but the students were supportive. Eventually, everyone in the classroom formed a circle and began playing a card game, but I threw my cards down and said that I wouldn't play with "a sexual predator and mass murderer". Trump said, "No, you're the mass murderer". I said, "Really? I've killed 210,00 people?". He got flustered and left. The professor approached me and said, with a sadness that surprised me, "You should have kept going", meaning that I should have kept playing the game and mocking Trump as I had been. I gathered that we were all playing roles, and I had abandoned my role by refusing to play and leveling serious criticism at Trump. A Federal agent approached to arrest me, but one of my classmates headbutted him, and I escaped. I realized that the classmate was Gavin Newsom (???). I took shelter in a friend's apartment. I was receiving very little support from the public & press, and didn't understand why. I found sheets of paper in my friend's room; they contained information that revealed my friend was the reason for the lack of support. I found a pile of red, square-shaped stickers with the letter "M" on them and threw them out the window. This dream, honestly, felt pretty cathartic.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

This one is really on-the-nose, prominent figures of the pandemic (Trump and Gavin Newsom) and explicit mention of the Trump administration's mishandling and the USA's death toll.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Yes. More often than in the past, my dreams have been pulling from the past (people, places, experiences) and featuring fantastic landscapes (frequently involving the ocean)

1. When did you have your dream(s)? Your best guess is fine. You can list a date range or multiple dates if you have multiple dreams to share.

Most recently was in the past month. I've probably had 3-5 in the past 3 months that I remember.

2. What did you dream? You can recount multiple dreams if you wish. A couple questions to consider: Were there elements of the dream that you recognize from 'real life'? How did the dream make you feel?

I have dreamed about escaping from the virus though I don't remember specific details. The most vivid dream I had was about getting the vaccine. I was so excited in the dream and set up the appointment and everything. When I showed up to get it though, they said that I couldn't. It was very hopeful and disappointing.

3. What makes this a pandemic dream? Again, this can be a literal connection, a metaphorical connection, or a purely subjective feeling - no wrong answers.

This was very literal as it dealt with the COVID-19 vaccine. Others I've had were more in tune with the social justice issues and gun violence in particular.

4. Do you feel that the pandemic has changed your dreams (their content, frequency, memorability, etc) in any way? If so, how have they changed?

Content wise for sure. I have had many more nightmares. I rarely used to get those before the pandemic. Otherwise, I've always had a lot of dreams and usually remember at least 2-3 a week.

5. Is there anything else you'd like to add? This is your space to include anything else about your dream, ask questions (I will email you a response), or give feedback.

Dreams have always fascinated me and it's very real that they connect to our emotions and fears more often than not. I think that it's peculiar and cool that our subconscious minds draw upon our lived realities. It can be scary at times but I find it liberating as well.
